

Free City Of Danzig

Roman Under Polish Name Of Gdansk In 1917 A.D.

The Free City of Danzig contains an area of 774 square miles and a population of 400,000. The territory was detached from East Prussia by the Treaty of Versailles in order to give Poland a port on the Baltic Sea.

The League of Nations executed its provisions over Danzig through a High Commissioner.

The Polish Republic has no access rights in Gdansk, as the city is called in Polish, but treats it as a part of its territory. A committee of affairs and railways. A committee of commerce and economic union exists between the two states.

Germany and Poland can claim the jurisdiction of the busy port. The first reserved mention of Danzig under its Polish name was in 1000—appears to have been in 1007 A.D.

The dukedom of Pomerania made it their capital in the Thirteenth century and encouraged German merchants to settle in it. The Teutonic Knights took possession of it in the Fourteenth century. And later it was one of the four leading cities in the Hanseatic League.

The Danzigers declared themselves a free city in 1440 under Polish protection. They passed to Prussia in 1773, with the partition of Poland, and remained in Prussia with the exception of seven years (1806-1814) when they were in French hands.

Architecturally and artistically, Danzig is one of the most beautiful cities in Europe.

One of its centers it has served as the shipping center for a large district embracing parts of both Germany and Poland, and its wealth and importance during previous periods must be largely assumed.—Detroit Free Press.

An Old Retainer

The Perfect Retainer Served For 72 Years In One Family

Alfred Wincy, the "perfect retainer," who served for 72 years in one family, died at Queenshead, Windsor, on the age of 104.

Wincy, who was a competitor a few years ago for the post of butler, was born in a Norfolk village near Northampton. He entered the service of Mrs. Deane, a wealthy widow, as footman, and on the death of her son, he remained with her. He was butler to Lord Churchill, was butler to Lord and Lady Churchill. He remained in the service until his death.

Lady Edward Spencer-Churchill, the daughter of Wincy, was a devoted friend of her family. "I was with him when he died," she added. "I was a good friend of his."

"I thought as much of him as I do of a well known painter down from London who had painted the portrait of me. I was with him in the library."—New York Times.

Wincy was on duty for five months ago when he became ill. Lady Edward gave him the best butler in the house, a young man, trained nurse to look after him day and night.

Two or three hours before his death he gave instructions how he wished to be laid out. He was laid out in the library, and he was laid out in the library, and he was laid out in the library.

He died the modern idea of death, and after he died, he was laid out in the library, and he was laid out in the library, and he was laid out in the library.

He was laid out in the library, and he was laid out in the library, and he was laid out in the library, and he was laid out in the library.

He was laid out in the library, and he was laid out in the library, and he was laid out in the library, and he was laid out in the library.

He was laid out in the library, and he was laid out in the library, and he was laid out in the library, and he was laid out in the library.

He was laid out in the library, and he was laid out in the library, and he was laid out in the library, and he was laid out in the library.

He was laid out in the library, and he was laid out in the library, and he was laid out in the library, and he was laid out in the library.

Good Farm Mortgage Loans

Pig-Raising Under Profitable Conditions During Years Of Depression

The pig has been aptly termed the "farm mortgage lender." During the recent years of the depression, it has been the department of agriculture, the pig has been more profitable than any other.

It has been the means of raising money for many a farmer and just about the only source of profitable income for thousands of others.

Pig raising is practical on a small scale throughout the Dominion. Some see the commercial value available in the country, and others see the value in the city.
